Description

Each day landscape architects, planners and fellow professionals are responsible for thousands of interactions between friends and strangers of different ages, races and backgrounds. People move in, out and through our work, influenced by our decisions, unconsciously melding into a larger community. As we touch landscapes, how do we make them attainable to individuals and society? How do we use order? Create beauty and simplicity? In essence, how do we prepare landscapes for our communities? On June 5th the Oregon Chapter of ASLA will present the 'Prepared Landscape', a symposium designed to promote discussion about the energy landscape architects provide today and the deciding force we will be in the future.
